Do boards pay attention when institutional investor activists “just vote no”?

Diane Del Guercio\textsuperscript{a}\textsuperscript{*}, Laura Seery\textsuperscript{b}, Tracie Woidtke\textsuperscript{b, c}

\textsuperscript{a}Charles H. Lundquist College of Business, University of Oregon, Eugene, Oregon, 97403, USA
\textsuperscript{b}Department of Finance, University of Tennessee, Knoxville, TN, 37996, USA
\textsuperscript{c}Corporate Governance Center, University of Tennessee, Knoxville, TN, 37966

Received 2 October 2006; received in revised format 14 December 2007; accepted 7 January 2008

Abstract
We examine “just vote no” campaigns, a recent innovation in low-cost shareholder activist tools whereby activists encourage their fellow shareholders to withhold votes toward a director’s election to express dissatisfaction with management performance or the firm’s corporate governance structure. Grundfest (1993) argues that a substantial withheld vote motivates directors to take immediate action to avoid further embarrassment. We find a variety of supportive evidence, including operating performance improvements and abnormal disciplinary chief executive officer (CEO) turnover, indicating that such campaigns induce boards to take actions in shareholders’ interests. Furthermore, abnormal turnover is robust to controlling for concurrent events and firm- and CEO-specific controls.

\textit{JEL classifications:} G23; G30; G34

\textit{Keywords:} Shareholder activism; CEO turnover; Director reputation; Public pension funds; Director elections